The class has only one method: testUpdatePhoneNumber(). Take what you've learned here and wear it in your real application. But that's all you need for the purposes of this guide. That means all the tests in this class aren't going to work with the actual DAO. But let's go back to the unit test code. But you still want to make sure they're working. Note that the method accepts two parameters: the updated phone number the Client object. This Client object is updated with the new phone number. So the first argument is argument #0, the second argument is argument #1, and so on. That's why they see those bits as method arguments. The Answer The Answer is literally the Answer. Thus, the unit test can check if there is an update. That persistence effort would also update the Customer object. Finally returns null. And you will write a unit test for a method that updates the client's phone number. Next, the code sets the customer's phone number based on the past values. This is what the Customer class looks like: public class Customer { public Integer id; public String firstName; public String lastName; public String phoneNumber; public Integer getid() { return id; } public void setid(Integer id) { this.id = id; } public String getFirstName() { return firstName; } public void setFirstName(String firstName) { this.firstName = firstName; } public String getLastName() { return lastName; } public void setLastName(String lastName) { this.lastName = lastName; } public String getPhoneNumber() { return phoneNumber; } public void setPhoneNumber(String phoneNumber) { this.phoneNumber = phoneNumber; } There's nothing too complicated there. I have the answer. It's going on a little bit in there. Take a look at the test class to see what I'm talking about: import static org.mockito.ArgumentMatchers.anyString; import static org.mockito.Mockito.doAnswer; import org.junit.jupiter.api.Test; import org.junit.jupiter.api.extension.ExtendWith; import org.mockito.Mock; import org.mockito.junit.MockitoExtension; import org.mockito.junit.MockitoJUnit; import org.mockito.junit.MockitoJUnitRunner; import us.careydevelopment.mockito.crudapp.mazo.CustomerHarness; import us.careydevelopment.mockito.crudapp.model.Customer; @ExtendWith(MockitoExtension.class) CustomerDaoTest public class { @Mock CustomerDao dao; @Test public void testUpdatePhoneNumber() { final String updatePhoneNumber = "919-555-1214"; Client client = CustomerHarness.createCustomer(); doAnswer(invocation -> { String phone number = (String) invocation.getArgument(0); Customer cust = (Customer) invocation.getArgument(1); cust.setPhoneNumber(phoneNumber); return null; }).when(dao).updatePhoneNumber(anyString(), any(Customer.class)); dao.updatePhoneNumber(updatePhoneNumber, client); Assertions.assertEquals(updatePhoneNumber, customer.getPhoneNumber()); } I left the imports instead so you can see where some of those static methods come from, like doAnswer(). Also, try to structure your application so that doAnswer() uses non-test code to get the correct result. It's pretty simple: public class CustomerDao { public void updatePhoneNumber(String phoneNumber, Customer customer) { //database work goes here //this code will update the given client object with the phone number } } Yep. You may be wondering, "Why not just write down the method that updates the Customer object and then check it as you would check an object with any other unit test?" Here's why: in the real world, this method would use JDBC or JPA to manage persistence. Values passed to the updatePhoneNumber() method do not matter. POM-POMs We're going to work with a ridiculously simple application here, but it includes a couple of dependencies. Now observe the last two lines of the test method. But look at it. %At %At eq of rarepucer ed sarugesa et omoc se AsA .olos As rop anoicuf on But you don't want to make that persistence call with a unit test. They have to be repaired explicitly because they could be anything. Have fun! Photo by Jessica Lynn Lewis: Pexels You can find some great opportunities for refactoring. The same method will update the client's object, but will not return anything. Your unit test will be verified to make sure that the code updated the phone number on the client object. If you call the real object instead of a mockery, you will participate in a database transaction. What the hell is that Donswer()? First, note that the DAO object mocks with the @mock annotation. Instead, a big fat void is returned. No problem, I'll show you how to do it here. Here's what that code looks like: CustomerSharness Public Class { Public Static Final Integer ID = 37; public static final string last name = "reesee"; Public static final string First_Name = "Beatrice"; PUBLIC STRIC FINAL STRING PHONE_NUMBER = "919-555-1212"; Static public client createcustomer() { client client = new client(); client.setfirstame(First_Name); Client.SetLastName(Last_Name); client.setphonenumber(telephone); client.setid(ID); return to client; } } If you are paying a lot of attention, you will see that the unit test will change the customer's phone number from 919-555-1212 to 919-555-1214. They'll be working with mockery. Note that you can also (probably) get out with the different versions. Wrapping him in happiness! Now he knows how to try a method that returns empty with Mockito. So you are in a pickle. This is what the POM file looks like:
